WHY IS THIS A GOOD EXAMPLE?

Tychy promenade is showcasing how to develop a whole waterfront into an attractive, family friendly public space for the local citizens. The space is inclusive for many different demographics and can be enjoyed all year round. Various parts of the promenade are joined together through similar design elements to a harmonious unity. This is a good example of combining several physical activity opportunities in one park to cater to a wide range of the population.

DESCRIPTION

Tychy promenade was created with the aim of bringing life back to the previously demoralised lake side. The promenade uses a lot of wood to create a connection with the nature and is not only used for walking and meetings, but it has grown into a holistic recreational area. There is a cycling path, cafes, a beach, a unique water playground and an "Aquater" for children, a modern outdoor gym, opportunities for ice skating in the winter and many water sport facilities. The Aquater water playground is special as it doubles as a children playground during the day and a fountain light show in the evening.
